

Soggy day postpones South Region tournament final

Contributed by Antoine Bell
Sunday, 16 May 2010
Last Updated Sunday, 16 May 2010

Mother Nature stamped a veto on what was supposed to be the final day of the South Region tournament on Sunday. Continuous rainfall forced the postponement of the game, with the rescheduled date to be Monday at noon.

After escaping Saturday which had a 60% chance of rain without a drop, the wet stuff moved in overnight on Saturday and continued through the morning off and on. After delaying the start until 2:45, game officials thought they had an opening. Pre-game activities got underway, including the starting lineups. However, before the national anthem could be played it began to rain again.

The winner of the finals will advance to the Super Regionals next weekend (May 21-22) in Valdosta, Ga. against Valdosta State. The Blazers swept a pair from Palm Beach Atlantic on Sunday to earn the Super Regional berth. In order to earn a trip to southeast Georgia, Arkansas-Monticello will have to do as Valdosta State did and sweep two from the Chargers.